Jesus

My dear apostles, it is time for me to announce myself as King. I am truly the King of Heaven and I am the King of all God's children on Earth. I am the King of all that is good and I am the King of love. Most of all, and most importantly for you, I am your King. Yes, it is to me that you owe allegiance as a follower and servant. I ask that you speak of me in relation to your contribution to the good of humanity and also in relation to your contribution to the good of our Church. Why do you serve? Is it not because you believe in the power and the goodness of your King? Do you serve me because you trust me to care for you and to care for that which is important to you? I believe this is true. I believe that you understand something about both my power and my goodness and I believe that you rely on me to care for your loved ones even in their sufferings and rebellions. Dearest apostles, to make way for your King you will have to fall back from drawing attention to yourself. One falls back, in this instance, by giving constant credit to God, who is fighting the battles and winning the souls. And the war is for souls, dear apostles. I am craving allegiance from all of God's children because I am craving what is good for them. Those who are away from me must see the goodness in you. You are truly offering the best possible message for everyone you encounter. Your message is one of love and welcome. You give the message as the messenger of the King. Be at peace. I am all powerful and you are on the side of Heaven.
