Jesus

Dear apostles, today I wish to bring you heavenly encouragement. You often feel the opposite of encouragement, that is, discouragement. While this experience of discouragement is an unavoidable part of your time on Earth, I want you to be aware of my presence in this cross. Talk to me about your feelings of discouragement and you will move through these periods safely and more comfortably. If you talk to me, you will be better able to understand that your discouragement comes from your humanity and not from Heaven. In other words, feelings of discouragement are not accurate reflections of Heaven's feelings about you, your service, or your effectiveness. It could be that all is going perfectly with you from Heaven's perspective, and yet, you are unaware of this for many reasons. Perhaps we are allowing a cross of suffering for you to bring benefits to you and to the world. You feel this as discouragement and yet Heaven is not discouraged. Indeed, it is often the case that Heaven is pleased with your faithfulness in the face of your cross. Human discouragement must be viewed with me, Jesus, so that its cause and benefit can be understood. As an example, someone suffering in their body with sickness or limitation can understandably struggle with discouragement. An apostle struggling in this way can accept that he is both receiving graces himself and obtaining graces for others. Beloved apostles, allow me into your struggle. It will become lighter. I will keep you encouraged if you remain united to me.
